3. Enabling Layers. A layer is a type of rasterized object in the background that exists independent of any other objects in the image. It's a container for specific edits such as color, gradients, and transparency. 4. Setting up the image and other materials. Select the image to apply the Photoshop Action to, which automatically brings up the Action panel on the right side of the image, as shown in Figure 4-1. 5. Selecting the appropriate tools for the job. Choose the tools in the panel to enable them and use them to create the effects you want. 6. Finishing touches. Add more than one layer and adjust their effects. Photoshop is a powerful and complex application, but it is really only the beginning. The fact that it's free to download at such a high level of quality encourages you to move beyond simple image editing. As you continue to work with layers, you have the ability to create complex graphics and even draw straight with the brush tool. Photoshop does not have the ability to perform a wide variety of drawing or graphic design. However, you can use other software with the same or an improved feature set. Figure 4-1: Layers, as well as several filters, are options for modifying a file in Photoshop. Create Exciting Graphics with Photoshop Photoshop is not a tool with a wide variety of features, but the fact that it's open source and free to download (at a high level of quality) encourages serious designers to use it to enhance their work, and Photoshop itself has a variety of tools to help you get started. You can use any of the tools in the Photoshop Action toolbox to create a graphic or bitmap — one of the many types of images that are created in the digital art process. These tools offer three basic functions: Create new image, create new layer, and make selection. In this section, I show you how you can combine the use of these tools to create graphics in Photoshop. Drawing with the Adobe Brush tool Photoshop has a useful tool called the Adobe Brush tool (located in the Adobe menu under Tools) that enables you to draw directly in the image. As you can see from Figure 4-2, this tool allows you to perform freehand brush-drawing in a

Transcriptome-based approach to identify genes involved in cold stress response of the Mediterranean mussel Mytilus galloprovincialis. The haemolymph transcriptome of the Mediterranean mussel Mytilus galloprovincialis, maintained at the sea level (18°C) and at the low temperature of 2°C, was analyzed with the aim of identifying genes involved in the cold response of M. galloprovincialis. By means of cDNA microarray hybridization, a total of 255 contigs were differentially expressed. After statistical analysis of the microarray data, a number of genes associated with biological processes, such as protein biosynthesis, energy metabolism, response to osmotic stress, cell communication and signal transduction, were found to be induced in the haemolymph of mussels exposed to the low temperature. The haemolymph transcriptome analysis demonstrated a strong up-regulation of genes encoding proteins involved in protein biosynthesis and the ubiquitin system, suggesting a relationship between protein degradation and the protective response observed at low temperature in the mussel. Mitochondrial aconitase, a key enzyme of the tricarboxylic acid cycle, was found to be induced in the haemolymph of mussels exposed to the low temperature, and thus, together with citrate synthase, it allowed us to assume that the tricarboxylic acid cycle was turned on during cold stress response. Several genes encoding antioxidant enzymes, such as superoxide dismutase, catalase and glutathione S-transferase were found to be induced in the haemolymph of mussels exposed to the low temperature and may play a role in the antioxidant system activation. Moreover, a large number of genes encoding proteins involved in the metabolism of nutrients were differentially expressed, suggesting a potential shift in the metabolism of carbohydrates and lipids during cold stress response of the mussel. The cold-induced up-regulation of several genes associated with the cytoskeletal system and with the transport and adhesion of cells (e.g. 12  $\beta$ -tubulin isotypes, 14 actin isotypes, 14 galectin isotypes, 14 cadherin isotypes) suggests a potential reorganization of the mussel haemolymph cells occurring in response to low temperature. In conclusion, the haemolymph transcriptome analysis demonstrated a substantial cold response of the mussel haemolymph cells, which plays an important role in maintaining the metabolic home
